Editorial Values

Audiences are at the heart of everything we do. #impact is committed to giving them high-quality, original and inspiring output.

Positivity and Transparency are at the core of our organisation.

We believe that positive change only comes through positive storytelling and passionate action and that collaboration and community building is the only way to grow.

At #impact we believe that freedom of speech is a basic human right.

We will never discriminate on grounds of age, race, colour, creed, disability, marital status, illegitimacy, gender or sexual orientation.

We respect the reputation and privacy of individuals and we will always protect confidential sources of information.

We will never take private advantage of information gained in the course of his/her duties, before the information is public knowledge.

Our podcasts do not contain explicit or adult content. If individual episodes do contain explicit or adult content we will use labelling to help online users make informed decisions about the suitability of content for themselves and their children.

If there should ever be an inaccuracy, misleading facts or figures, or distortion of original meaning, we will provide persons or organisations affected with the earliest opportunity to rebut and will make corrections promptly.

We will be transparent about the nature and origin of the content we offer online. Where appropriate, we will identify who has created it.

If we receive compensation for sponsored content, we will be transparent and label that content accordingly.

We respect copyright and will always credit sources when material was shared with us by other content providers.

For our audio production, we exercise minimal editing, but we retain the right to edit if we find content contradicts our Editorial Values. Likewise we retain the right to edit online comments if we find them in contradiction of our Editorial Values.

We seek to uphold our Editorial Values in all we do. They apply to all our content including our audio, online content as well as our interactive services.
